

References Update #1 September 1 2020

Before I begin, once again, I'm still getting emails and messages wishing or desiring for me to change "my tone" because people think that I am condescending. I would recommend reading or watching my Joseph Smith; Revelation and the Beasts of Daniel paper/video. To quickly summarize, simply put, I don't believe I am "superior" to anybody, I do however believe there are cases where people are right and cases where people are wrong. I believe everyone has the same divine potential but that does not mean that everyone is living up to it, myself included. If somebody said, "you are wrong!" I would like to know why they think that and see evidences they have for that claim- I would not be wroth. If someone said, "you don't know everything!" I would respond "duh!" If someone said, "you are not perfect" I would respond "you are right" and then I would list off all my faults. One of those faults would not be pride, one of those faults would not be dishonesty.

With that said, in this video/paper I would like to go over some resources that my wife has found. I don't go googling around the internet anymore- YouTube, Facebook etc but when I started posting my work online as I said in my video/paper, The Prepared Need Not Fear, my wife started looking around YouTube trying to find the intellectual state of the members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. I know that some will think or claim that what I am about to say is rude or condescending or any of those words you want to heap on me. But what I am about to share with you is simply the truth.

I found that most LDS writers, YouTubers etc fell into two categories: the first category I would classify as the "all is well in Zion" people. These were writers and YouTubers that basically treat the church as an open journal or blog. They would answer "tough" questions such as "why do we need the Book of Mormon?" or "was Joseph Smith a prophet?" Even the Church's own YouTube channel seems to be geared towards the lowest common denominator- "non-members" or members struggling in the church. It is all milk, no oatmeal, let alone meat. And Joseph Smith taught that a man is saved in the Kingdom of God only as fast as he obtains knowledge and lives according to that knowledge or light; "Man cannot be saved in ignorance". These members think that they can stick their toe in the kiddie pool and when the time comes, they will be able to swim in the deep end. We need to know how to swim.

The second group of "LDS people" that my wife found online were members like I discussed in The Prepared Need Not Fear, like Jake Hilton. These are intellectuals or pseudo-intellectuals who claim to be members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints but who are not. This group will actually teach meat but it is mingled with poison. I found, just like poison spreads in your veins, many LDS YouTubers stealing slides from Jake Hilton and teaching his doctrine. I do not read or subscribe to any thing that flirts with the line of the keys of God. I watched enough Jake Hilton for example to figure out what he was and what was happening with the LDS community online and then I left. This group is the "we the few" group (these two groups are what I go into in great detail in my paper, The Father: Hear Him). These people teach a form of "celestial racism"- that their spirit body that they came to earth in was made from celestial spirit matter and that's why they are just better than everyone else. It has nothing to do with how you chose to use your agency, nothing to do with repentance and the atonement, etc, its simply a matter of what you were born/created as or with. These members or “scholars”, some might still cling to the LDS title but inwardly they are ravening wolves. They wear the title “LDS” simply as a way to try to give themselves credibility, validity and impartiality, as they inject their fangs in you and release their poison, destroying your faith and attempting to get you to leave the faith because they don’t actually have a testimony. Others of this group are openly excommunicated members, openly opposed to the Church, openly opposed to the keys etc. What’s driving me crazy and frankly making me a bit furious is that the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints appears to have lost their intellectuals with a testimony. Where are you? I feel like Micah of old, a ripe grape alone on a vine, wondering, “Where are the intellectuals of the church who have hearts that beat for the Savior and His restored church? Where are ‘the kingdom of God or nothing!’ crowd?” I understand why we have the “we the few” crowd, I understand this. They have always existed. You can take offense to this all you want, the facts are the facts. And the facts are, that you will never find pseudo-intellectual LDS (or excommunicated/inactive) people who are obsessed with the doctrine of the Church who are all-state in football. You will never find one that was voted “most likely to succeed” or “most popular” in high school. You will not find in this group people who were all-state in band and choir for all three years of high school. You won’t find in this crew people who went on missions to places where missionaries would baptize on average one person per year and they brought into the church over 100 people. These are the wolves in sheep’s clothing, these are the gammas of the herd, these are “the secret kings” etc. You can take offense to that all you want, it doesn’t change the fact that most of these people have known mental issues, they are not mentally stable, they were outcasts in high school and they have nothing else going for them in their lives. They are miserable, they need to dress in sheep’s clothing in order to be welcomed in.

Do I think that I am superior to these individuals? No. Do I however, know that I have applied myself better than most, if not all, of these individuals? Yes. Priestcraft is when you “preach the word of God to set yourself as a light unto the world, to get gain and praise of men.” Why would people practice priestcraft? Here’s a better questions for you, would somebody like Donald Trump ever practice priestcraft? No he wouldn’t. Why not? He doesn’t need it to set himself up or to get gain or praise of the world. He has applied himself in other areas.

So where am I going with this? Why is it so important for members of the Church to recognize wolves in sheep’s clothing? Well my wife, two or three days ago, was doing her normal “searching for good articles or videos” that we could link to our papers and she stumbled across a video entitled, “The Return of Joseph Smith”, which title is almost identical to my paper, “Joseph Smith to Return”. Ashley was so happy to have found another member, somewhere in the world, who knew the scriptures! She called me over and we watched the first video together (it turns out that there was actually 6 parts to it and we started on part 3). And I said “wow, that was done really well, let’s watch the rest of them.” So we started back on 1 and watched all six. When we finished watching them we posted a comment on the first video (which should still be there), giving links and explaining the paper I had written and asking if there was a pdf or word version of his paper so that I could check some of the reference of his work (because there were some things in it that raised my eyebrow). He then responded and gave us a link to his blog. In the meantime Ashley decided to watch a few more of their videos and all the sudden it becomes apparent that this individual might be a RLDS member or at least not an active member of the Lord's church. So we go to the link of his blog and find that he is openly no longer an active member of the church. I turn to my wife and say, "well, I guess we are not watching any more of these videos!" She then scrolls down in the blog to find this individual (who by the way is known anonymously- which should raise flags) to find him accusing me of plagiarizing his paper, The Return of Joseph Smith. Raising my right arm to the square, I testify before Gods and angels, that I have never plagiarized. Anyone. If I can find a work of another, I would much rather use the words of another than my own. Meaning, if I had found another's work and that individual had any semblance of credibility, I'd simply quote them verses doing the work myself. Anyone who is familiar with my work knows that whenever possible I would rather quote a scripture or LDS manual, etc than use my own words. I did not plagiarize this individual's work, I did not even know that this individual existed until a few days ago.

So I ask again, where are all the intellectuals in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints that actually know the doctrine? Who didn't just spend 5 minutes watching an excommunicated member's video and then spew out nonsense about Daniel and the beasts of revelation. Is that offensive to some? I'm sure it is. It doesn't change it however from being the God's honest truth. Where are those who love the gospel of Jesus Christ, know and understand the doctrine and retain their iron clad testimony of the Prophet Joseph Smith, the Book of Mormon and of the keys of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. I would link you to "Mr. Watcher's" YouTube but considering he is a wolf in sheep's clothing, I will leave that choice up to you. That said however, his paper, The Return of Joseph Smith, is 90% accurate but I will not be watching or reading any more of his videos/papers. Ashley adds, "I'm disappointed because when I search the internet I only end up finding anti or wolves in sheep's clothing or milk."

So as far as Joseph Smith returning, we have a documentary done by a 16 year old girl as a homeschool project, a book written by a Skousen (whose family's name's reputation has taken a beating in the church) and this anonymous feller who isn't a member and is leading people out of the church.

Poor Joseph. If this isn't alarming to every member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, you are in a state of stupor that only God's wrath will wake you up from.

I don't know where the Neal A Maxwells, the Bruce R McConkies, the Hyrum Andrus', the James E. Talmages went in the church. But they need to wake up and come back.

Speaking of Hyrum Andrus, I would still say that 90% of what he taught was exceptionally well done. The world desperately needs men like him back. You can find his content on the channel, Light and Truth.

But my wife has found a couple other papers/talks that blew us away and sounded like I had written them myself. Once again, I can't validate all of their work. I've watched almost all of Hyrum Andrus' videos and I'm willing to validate him (we have a different opinion on speculation, such as where the 10 tribes are, but the "known doctrine" we are in complete agreement on). I will share this next one (but I don't know if this writer has written anything else or his position in the church):

"Tent Cities in the Last Days?"

https://www.abysmal.com/LDS/Preparedness/why_tent_cities.pdf

Those who are familiar with my 10 Virgins paper and my Temporal Salvation paper etc will be able to see the similarities with that man's writing. It is an exceptionally well-done piece.

Ashley also found an old talk from Bruce R. McConkie entitled, Stand Independent above All Other Creatures, which was given in 1979 (I was born in 1985). It bears striking resemblance to my papers, The Prepared Need Not Fear and Celestial Law (living the law of consecration allows us to stand independent above all other creatures).

We have obviously torn through the book, The Teachings of the Prophet Joseph Smith, and it is sad and shocking how few people have read it despite its wide circulation and significant nature. We would recommend everyone to have a copy of this in their home.

If you can stand Bruce R McConkie (people seem to have more problems with him than with me, and that's saying something) we have a 2nd edition of Mormon Doctrine that's pretty marked up and I've yet to find anything in it super controversial. I've had some questions about his Millennial Messiah but as crazy as it is I haven't actually read it- I should get a copy of it.

We've also been reading Parley P. Pratt's A Voice of Warning, it's scary how similar our writing style is.

I've watched both of Millennial Reign's videos a few times (at one point in time I broke down his video with timestamps questioning the validity of what was being taught, but I found that people viewed it as combative and it turned them off and so I don't do that anymore). If he actually made a third video with any sort of relevant content we will talk then.

I've watched all of Jodi Stoddard's videos and much like Millennial Reign, if people are familiar with Jake Hilton's work they will see eerie familiarities between their work and his. Jodi goes about her understanding of last days prophecies with a much different pyramid of truth (I go over the pyramid of truth in my Joseph Smith; Revelation and the Beasts of Daniel as well as my breakdown of President Nelson's The Future of the Church: Preparing the World for the Savior's Second Coming). She seems to think that random Jews who don't hold the priesthood and aren't members of Christ's church can fulfill prophecies. Temples and ordinances require the priesthood, without the priesthood they are meaningless. You have a right to exercise the priesthood by blood, but your blood is not the priesthood and it does not give you the priesthood. Once again, if people find you are "combative" even if what you are saying is the truth, they lock up.

There's really no one else that we have found online who even attempts to put things together, let alone has a solid doctrinally based foundation under their feet. Like I've said repeatedly in this paper, where are they? Most of the knowledge, the real knowledge, comes from people who are dead. Now its just progressive drivel. This might get me in trouble with some of the people who read my papers, but Glenn Beck seems to have a clearer understanding of things than most. Which isn't so much as a flat endorsement as it is once again a statement of the state of our church. For those of you who can stand Glenn Beck (once again he is a lot like me, he seems to polarize people), the last video that he just put out from The Blaze on YouTube entitled, “A New Era is Here: if you think something is VERY wrong with America in 2020, you are not alone”, was sobering. Glenn Beck also wrote a paper, Preparedness guide to the Marxist revolution, that I’d whole-heartedly endorse.

If you have any other materials that you have found, please send them our way, we will check them out. If they are done by members and are doctrinally sound, I will gladly endorse them/link them/ share them.

People getting upset about plagiarism of the gospel act like the gospel is a giant puzzle box (this is group 2, see my paper The Father; Hear Him) and that they’ve figured out some secret that they only know and if someone else comes to the same conclusion, they must have stolen it from them. It’s like these people don’t understand how the testimonies of Matthew, Mark and Luke were written. This is why I don’t sign any of my papers or try to make myself a light, yes that’s priestcraft, but more than that, the arrogance to assume that someone else somewhere in the history of the world hasn’t written something very similar (using the same source of knowledge) is flabbergasting. Joseph Smith said, “shouldn’t there be one answer that is right for everyone?” Aren’t we supposed to have one Lord, one faith, one baptism? This is why I want people to find talks written by general authorities or those with keys to validate things I’ve said. Because if it is true, everyone will be saying the same thing. This is why you should never sell your works centered in the Holy Ghost ie. the scriptures. The Holy Ghost is the mind and will of God pertaining to us, it never changes. So when one man writes under the influence of the Holy Ghost and another man does the same, and accuse each other of plagiarism, they are both ignoramuses because neither one of them authored it. They are both trying to sell the mind and will of God and con it off as their own work, their own words. If you are not writing or teaching from the writings of men who were wrought upon by the Holy Ghost (ie. keys) then what you have isn’t worth spit anyways; and if you are writing or working off of writings of men who were wrought upon by the Holy Ghost then none of your works, none of your words are yours to begin with. This is why priestcraft is such a horrendous sin in the eyes of God, it is not only selling what God wants to be free, it is not only passing off God’s plainness as your own wisdom, cunning, deciphering abilities (that only you can figure out) etc, it is an open sin of rebellion that is as old as Satan standing up in the Councils of Heaven saying, “give me thine honor, give me thine glory” ie. “set me up as a light” (see my paper, Rebellion vs Weakness).

Until the Savior shows up in the flesh and tells me personally, “the keys are no longer in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints” I and my family, will stand firmly and proudly as members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints and issue the same warning that Brigham Young issued all those years ago: “You cut the thread that binds you to the prophet (keys) and you sink yourself to hell!” One cannot be right with God and be at conflict with the keys of God. If you are at odds with the keys of God, I plead with you in the name of Jesus Christ to repent, humble yourself and thus save yourself. The Lord said that His arms are open wide all the day long and they will remain open all the day long until the day ends. May we embrace and stand firm in the arms of Christ and his anointed servants before our day of mortal probation is over, or the Lord returns, is my prayer and commitment to the saints of God, in the name of Jesus Christ, Amen.
